Vidmate app new version

In May, Google announced it was making changes to Android Otto including the addition of a dark theme. Today Google went into more detail on its blog about what those behind the wheel of an automated Android-compatible vehicle can expect. Now when you're driving, it can be dangerous to have multiple taps on the screen looking for a specific app. So the launch of the new app is featured on Android Auto and it allows you to find the app you want using fewer taps. The bottom left button of the launcher will open the app and your favorite apps will appear in the top row. It might just save you from mowing down pedestrians just so that you can find the phone app. When Google Assistant was added to Google Maps earlier this year, Google addressed the merger in a smart and secure way. The company restricted assistant functionality on Maps so that responses are sounded and the user doesn't have to look at the screen. Something similar is provided on Auto Android as some app icons include google assistant badges. Like Calendar, these apps will use a virtual digital assistant to relay information to you so that your eyes stay on the road. And whether Google Maps, Vaze or another navigation app is your favorite for turn-by-turn directions, Android will auto-display it to help deliver you from point A to point B. If an address is already set up on your phone, Android Auto will automatically load directions to that location. A notification button on the bottom right will display unread notifications, recent calls and alerts. And Google points out that you can keep in touch with friends and families while keeping your eyes on the road. All you have to do is press the microphone button on the command, tap the microphone icon on the screen, or say Hey Google to fetch the Google Assistant. With a digital donor, you can make calls, send texts or read your notifications. Take google's updated Android auto screen says that Android Auto can now fit the wide screen in cars and features fonts that are easier to read; Don't forget the dark theme. While the update will not appear in the Auto Android app on your phone, it will start rolling in vehicles over the next few weeks. Subscribe to our newsletter!
